

why wait when you can automate?

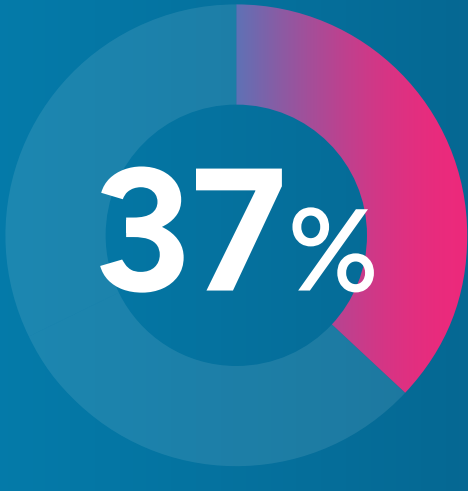

Waiting for regulation or payer-sponsored solutions to solve the prior authorization crisis is costing providers.

Prior authorizations are increasingly burdensome for providers, but fewer than a third have adopted automation to help. The market for prior authorization technology is as complex as prior authorizations themselves, and no one solution is ideal for all providers. But waiting for a silver bullet is leaving money on the table.

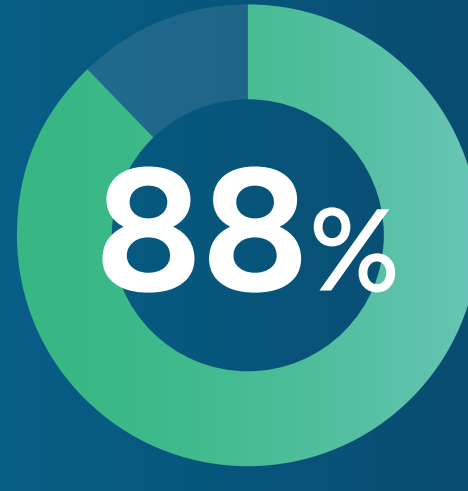

the state of prior authorization.

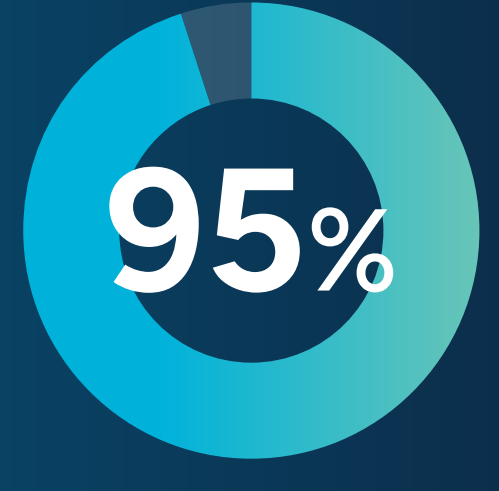

number of prior authorizations per physician, per week¹

of providers conduct fully manual prior authorizations, with 31% fully electronic and 32% partially electronic²

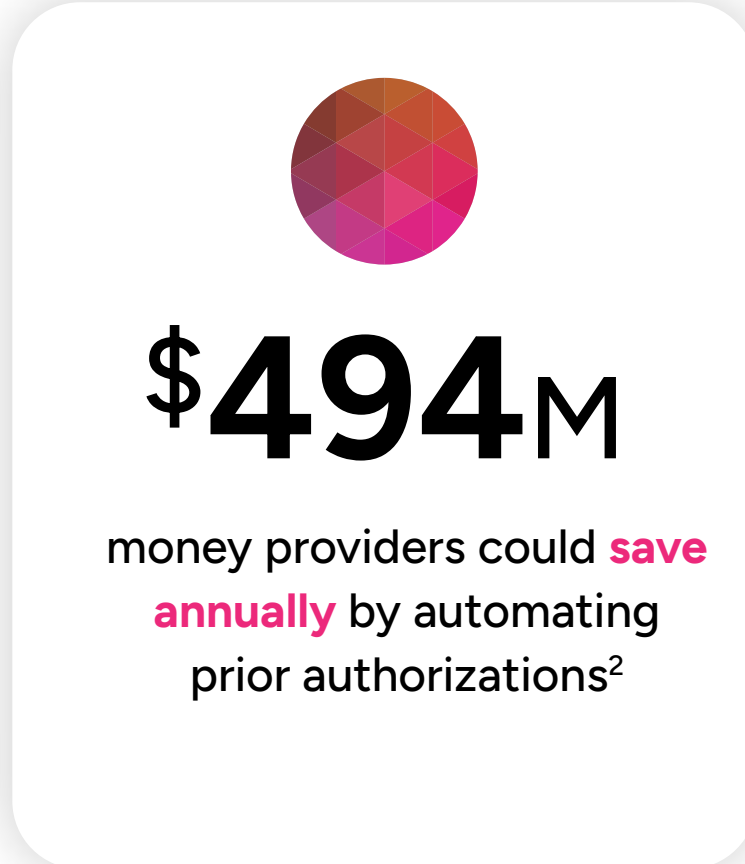

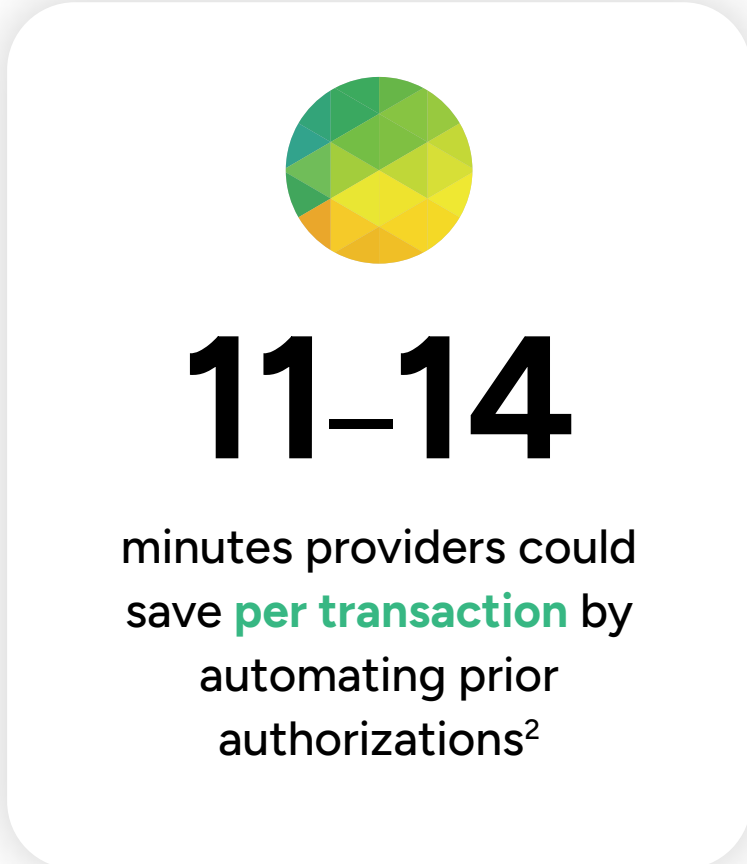

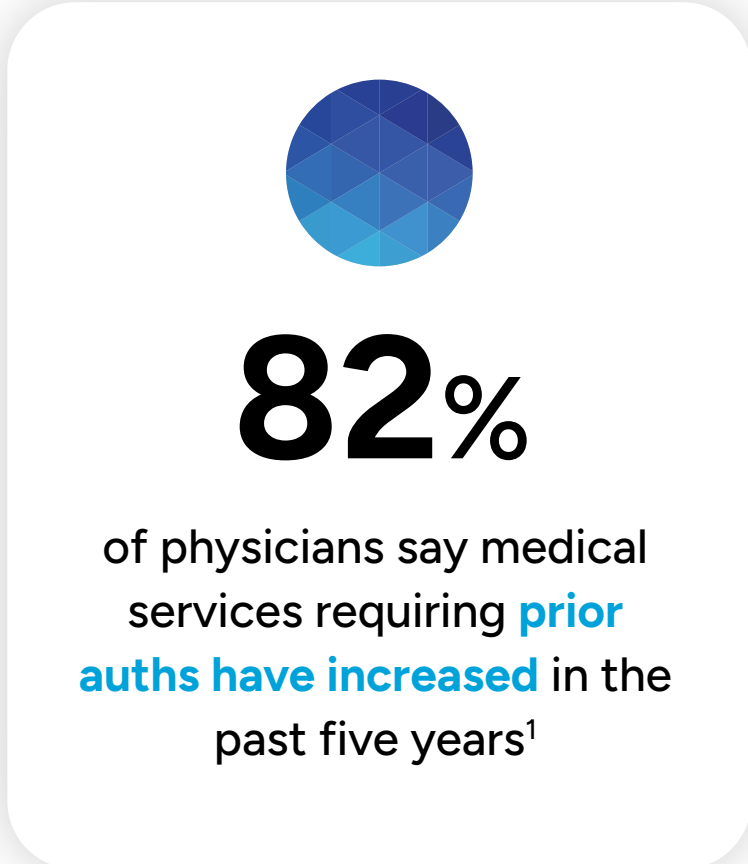

Meanwhile, most major payers are using automation for prior authorization processes³ of physicians say prior authorization contributes to burnout¹ time is money.

Prior authorization volume is only increasing. Can you afford to lose more time to manual processes?

What could your team accomplish with 63% touchless authorizations and a 90% automation success rate?

Janus Health Prior Authorization client results, representing in-scope authorizations you have to do more with less.

of hospitals and health systems are experiencing a labor shortage⁴

reported turnover for patient access, RCM, and patient experience roles⁵ of healthcare workers were more satisfied with their job after adopting an automation solution⁶.

One health system gained the equivalent of 3 FTEs in pre-service capacity by automating prior authorization.

Janus Health Prior Authorization client results

get paid what you're owed.

Authorization denials are preventable, but largely unrecoverable.

of all denials are authorization related⁷

of those denials are due to missing or invalid authorization⁷

Our customer reduced authorization-related write-offs by 16 percent, representing a $1.7M revenue impact.

Janus Health Prior Authorization client results

By choosing an automation solution with the right combination of functionality, payer connectivity, and service line coverage, providers have a tremendous opportunity⁸ to level the playing field with payers and take back their time. Why wait to automate when so much is on the line? Learn more about Janus Health Prior Authorization today.